Q1: Absolutely my work is a form of medicine for me as in order for me to teach and share what I do. It is vital that I walk my talk. My purpose is to support women to live their joy, allow their light to shine brightly, be connected to their heart, higher self and the earth. To step from fear into faith, from being a victim to being empowered. To ultimately be the best version of themselves.

In order for me to teach this I must be an example of this so daily I am reminded to step into that in each moment. As I write, teach and coach I am reminded and as I hear myself share words it is as though I am also inviting myself to do these things, to be these things.

I am so present when I work, a deep sense of presence like no other. As I channel for my clients I am channeling for myself. As I work with my clients we mediate, we connect with source and the earth and as much as I give I also receive I get to be in this space present and connected throughout my day.

My work brings me alive in a unique way different then when with my family or in other things I do in my life it brings me a deep sense of purpose, fulfillment and joy which is so healing. I know its my dharma, one of my life's purposes and if I was not able to share in the way I do I would not get to expand and grow as I do and for this I am beyond grateful.

The latest class I taught was being honest with yourself and it was profoundly powerful for me as preparing for it and as I was teaching it allowed me to get even more connected with my own truth of who I am and gave me a deeper understanding of my journey.

Q2: Be what you share and teach. Allow yourself to keep expanding and sharing. Always come from a pure place of service.
